

Deloitte.

Deloitte Impact
2012

Commenting policy

Commenting policy

Deloitte encourages professional discussion and interaction with the content on our Deloitte Impact 2012 website. All comments to the site are moderated before they are posted to ensure that they are appropriate, and also so that people visiting this website and posting comments, feel safe to do so.

Comments will be posted providing they are appropriate and meet our guidelines outlined below.

Please read further in order to fully understand the way comments are dealt with for this site:

The following will cause your comment to be deleted:

- Libelous comments.
- Obscene or sexually explicit comments.
- Personal attacks, insults, or threatening language.
- Plagiarized material or material that violates intellectual property rights.
- Spam and commercial promotions.
- Comments that are off topic or that link to material that is off topic.
- Comments that embed images from external sources or where additional software would be required to view content contained in the comments.
- Comments which intend to mislead or impersonate another person.
- Including contact details – if you need to contact us please use the contact page here.
- Linking to any sites which contravene any of the above rules.

We may also choose to modify comments before they are posted, for instance if they contain broken links but the rest of the content is good.

Publishing a comment for public viewing does not mean that Deloitte endorses the viewpoint contained in it. This is the same for any links which are contained in published comments; they are there to allow a fair discussion and to create diversity of viewpoint.

We reserve the right to update our policies around commenting as and when required by the business.